Future Proofing a Dream Home

To the Andrews, Lifestyle Lift was the obvious choice for enhancing their brand new dream home.

Pauline and Peter Andrews, a couple in their 60s have been living in the picturesque city of Llandudno for 15 years. The couple loved the location of their home, which was peaceful and quiet, yet close to the city. However, the one-bedroom brick chalet was getting dated and too small for their needs. The couple was determined to stay where they were, even though it took them a painstaking 11 years to obtain planning permission for a new-build home.

At the end, their project turned out to be worth the wait. Finally, in 2015 they were able to hire a timber frame company to help realise their dream home. The sparkling property was built in the garden of their existing plot, spanning two levels with a reverse layout. Entrance is on the first floor which houses the kitchen and living room, while the bedrooms, study and courtyard are located on the ground floor.

“Our favourite feature of the new home is the expansive sea view from the open plan first floor”, Pauline and Peter commented. Whilst the couple are currently in good health, they wanted to ensure that they could continue to enjoy their stunning house for years to come. This desire sent them on the lookout for an access solution. “We finally had our dream home. We wanted to future proof it in case of any mobility issues we may experience in the future”, they explained.

An access solution suited for a modern home

Right from the outset, it was clear to the couple that they wanted an aesthetically pleasing and unobtrusive solution for access between floors. Built from oak, their graceful staircase complemented the oak kitchen counters and a stairlift would clearly not have fitted in the picture.

“We decided that a home lift was the appropriate solution for us and came across the Lifestyle Lift at the Homebuilding & Renovating Show in Harrogate”, the couple said. “We liked the stylish design of the lift and the fact that it did not require an enclosure, which would have meant permanent, costly alterations to the structure of the home”, Peter explained.

The Lifestyle Lift offered the couple exactly what they were looking for. With a slim profile and a self-supporting frame, the lift fit perfectly in the corner of their combined kitchen and dining area. The couple opted for a custom slate grey for the lift’s exterior and interior car with a matching charcoal carpet. They also chose a fold up seat for added comfort and a telephone fitted in the lift for peace of mind.

Ease of access for everyone

Pauline and Peter could have not been more pleased with the service from Terry Lifts. "Terry Lifts' office staff and installation team were professional from start to finish. We have nothing but positive things to say about our experience. Their installation team put great care into keeping the area clean and minimised the disturbance over the short period of time that the lift was installed in", they explained.

The Lifestyle Lift has become a central feature of their beautiful home and it is something that Pauline and Peter now demonstrate with pride to visiting family and friends. Their guests are equally impressed of the functional, yet aesthetically pleasing design – and it makes a major difference in their visit. "We have elderly parents and aunts, who can now visit our home and access both floors safely and easily. The Lifestyle Lift makes a great difference in the comfort and safety of our new home".
